Your first question, as to the rank which belongs, properly to Sombrero Guano, will be best answered by the annexed table which shows its composition: Water, 3.52; Sand and Siliea, 68; Organic Lime (with Organic Acids,) 6.97; Carbonate Lime, 5.34; Bone Phosphate Lime, 64.67; Phosphates Magnesia, 2/39; Phosphate Alumina 3.62; Phosphate Iron, 1.95; Chloride Potassium, 09; Silicate Potassa and Lime, 6. Oxide fron, 1.10; Alumina, 3.13. Total, 100.44.

Actual Bone Phosphate, 67.96; or Calculated Bone Phosphate, 73.78.

The above analysis was conducted with the rigid care of a scientific investigation .-The samples employed were also of assured integrity, being a fair average of several cargues, and from a reliable source.

In the Commercial and Agricultural expression for this Guano, as above noted, I have distinguished the Phosphoric Acid, which exists in combination with Lime and Magnesia, as actual Bone Phosphate, while I give the title of calculated Bone Phosphate to the actual phosphate conjointly with that portion of Phosphoric Acid present in the Guano as Phosphate of Alumina and Phosphate of Iron, because the equivalent of the latter in Bone Phosphate of Lime is determined by calculation. The Alumina and Iron Phosphates; it may be proper to add, though of value in the fertilization of soils, are, in degree, inferior, for that purpose, to actual Bone Phosphate of Lime. With this explanation, it will be evident, then, from the Table, that precedence belongs to Sombrero compared with other Phosphatic Guanos not only beeause of its very much greater richness in Phosphoric Acid, but also for the reason that nearly the whole of that constituent occurs in the Guano as actual Bone Phosphate of Lime. Morever, Sombrero Guano is characterized by much uniformity of dryness and composition, as well as by a very limited amount of matters which would be valueless to crops.

2. The presence of oxide of Iron is detrimental to a fertilizer, when the proportion may be excessive and in indissoluble combination. But these conditions do not pertain 10 Sombrero Guano; for it holds only a small readiness to the solvent power of atmospheric agencies in the soil. I base my judgment tial election of 1848. In addition to the above we add the following extract from the Tribune's article.

It meets with peculiar favor with the large South ern firms, who mis Peruvian with phosphatic guanos, and honestly sell the compound under its proper name. Since the island came in Amercan possession, three years ago, the demand in this country for its guano deposits has risen from 2, softons the first year to 20,000 the present year, and it is quite improble that any more than this there being no harber- and only two anchorages dria Railroad at Culpeper Court House, by a good quantity could be annually supplied, because of at buoys a fourth of a mile from shore.
